THAT LAST INFIRMITY OF NOBLE MIND

An English teacher, having read some of Milton's poetry to her class, mentioned that the great poet was blind. The next day she put this question in an examination: "What was Milton's great affliction?"

Most of the class got the answer right, but one student had scribbled: "He was a poet."

IN PETROL VERITAS

A certain bon vivant was always boasting about his ability to differentiate among various vintages of fine wine. Finally, in an attempt to curb his vanity, a friend handed him a silver flask and asked him to identify the contents.

The would-be connoisseur took a huge mouthful of the fluid, made a horrible face, and spat. "Good heavens, man!" he exclaimed. "Why, that's gasoline."

"Yes, yes," murmured his friend impatiently. "But what octane?" Mrs. S.L.
